In this talk, I will engage with the multiple ways Welsh-English bilingual workplaces are managed and experienced in the context of an overtly socially equitable bilingual agenda. Using the sociolinguistic lens of critical language policy, I explore several layers of language policy as powerful mechanisms, discourses, practices and ideologies. Together, these layers contribute to unpack how social and linguistic inequities, latent or manifest power dimensions and ideologies work within the use of language, and which ramifications this has on workplace policy, agency and wider social practices.
